Lillooet Country Bukkit Rock Promotional image of the rebuilt community at Buchilla, in 1890. In 1890 one of the small log cabins which had been built at the turn of the century was rebuilt at Buchilla. At the time of its construction it was known as the New London Station, but was renamed the Buchanan School. At the same time a new community was built. By 1890 approximately 80 people had settled at this point along the trail, primarily interested in trapping and fishing. During the summer, people of the community stayed to work on farms along the line of the trail. Like most of the other communities along the trail, Buchilla became an important depot and trading point. The location was particularly important because it was considered one of the end stations, along with Kamloops and Yale. The site of Buchilla Station had been used by a number of different First Nations for thousands of years. It was a Wiewoodwah village which was later called Buchilla in the local dialect. The Wiewoodwah relocated in 1905 to the then newly constructed settlement of Smithers, in Interior British Columbia.This invention relates to a helical tracking device which has an active loop and inertial frames for deriving the azimuth and elevation of a target point thereon. The prior art approach for deriving azimuth and elevation of a point on a target surface was to first survey a target area using line-of-sight surveying techniques, and then to survey a series of azimuth stations, and then use a series of elevation stations to ascertain a relative position of points on the target surface, and determine the azimuth and elevation of the points thereon. This is disadvantageous in that it requires substantial surveying and surveyor equipment. This invention provides a relatively inexpensive helical tracking device which is capable of producing azimuth and elevation data with a degree of accuracy requiring an expenditure of only a small amount of labor, and being applicable to the survey of three-dimensional terrain and other target surfaces./* Copyright (C) 2007-2020 Free Software Foundation, Inc. The engine is expected to become available in Isuzu trucks worldwide by 2020. It promises to reduce toxic emissions of nitrogen oxides, a primary cause of smog, as well as particulate matter and hydrocarbons. It is expected to bring the fuel efficiency and output of the truck to approximately 98% and 88% respectively. "This is one of the strategic moves and the key product in the strategic plan to defend and revitalise our business and development of [Isuzu's] new business. Isuzu Harmony Diesel engine Like Isuzu cars and trucks, the new engine is also expected to be sold in the US. The company plans to promote it as Isuzu Harmony Digital Diesel. Cheaper to run than conventional diesel engines, the new engine is projected to add as little as 2.5kg of CO_2 (equivalent) to the fuel mix required for a truck to cover the same distance. It will also cut particulate matter and nitrogen oxides emissions by about 70-80%, and reduce emissions by about 25-30% compared with conventional diesel engines. The benefits to commercial vehicle drivers will be immediate, Takahashi said. "In the area of reducing traffic congestion and air pollution, the new [engine] is going to improve environmental ecology. [It] will produce a
