The mouse-driven trading interface makes it simple to establish a variety of "profiles" for day trading that will help you to maximise your profits. MTP, like all of the MultiTerminal products, is designed to assist with day trading, but it has the capability to manage every kind of trading model. It can also be used to manage trading programs in a number of areas, including: News trading News trading is a method of placing orders on the news only. For example, one might want to buy a particular stock when it announces a positive earnings report. News traders also use news as a method of timing a trade. By placing their order at just the right moment, news traders can also make a profit. Technical analysis Technical analysis is the use of chart patterns and other technical indicators to "time" a particular market move. While this method is not common in the U.S. or European markets, it is a significant part of trading in Japan. Chart patterns and indicators can also be applied to trading in individual currency pairs. The pattern of a currency pair, for example, can be used to predict future movements in that currency pair. Alerts The Alert Center is a very flexible tool. It helps you to set up alert systems to let you know when specific market conditions are met. For example, if you are long in a particular market, you can set up an alert that tells you when the market reaches a certain price level. The Alert Center can alert you to a number of conditions. But the alert messages are not generated automatically. Instead, you choose the market conditions that you wish to be alerted to, and enter the order to generate the alert. MultiTerminal Pro also has an MTS (Multiple Terminal System). This feature can be used to trade independently on more than one trading platform simultaneously. MultiTerminal Pro has a comprehensive Help file that is worth reading carefully to get an in-depth understanding of its options.
