Amazon.com Inc. is pushing into the world of health care. It is the latest, biggest push by a technology giant to enter a business in which Wall Street has been skeptical about its ability to succeed. Amazon.com said Tuesday it will offer an online pharmacy that would compete with pharmacy chains like Wal-Mart and CVS. Amazon said it has entered into a licensing agreement with Suna Health Corp., a Virginia-based company that operates several brick-and-mortar health stores. Under the agreement, Suna will have the exclusive right to sell and distribute the pharmacy's products in the United States. Hematologists are highly trained in the fields of hematology and blood disorders. They treat patients of all ages and stages of life who have blood disorders, including patients who have developed blood disorders as a result of chemotherapy and patients who have been treated for leukemia or lymphoma. They are often consulted by other doctors regarding how to treat certain types of blood disorders, and they also work with other doctors to plan and coordinate blood disorder treatment. Today, a large majority of hematologists are either board certified or licensed by the American Board of Medical Specialties, and many have advanced degrees. They work for hospitals, universities, research institutions, private and public health companies and non-profit organizations. There are many types of blood disorders, with more than a hundred causes for each. Each blood disorder requires a different type of treatment, and many of these treatments can have side effects or have their own complications. Although there are specialists for certain blood disorders, many blood disorders require a hematologist to perform treatments. Hematologists also may be involved in blood disorder research. One type of blood disorder, for example, is thalassemia, an inherited disorder that can cause blood cells to be either too few or too many. In cases of thalassemia, the hemoglobin of the blood cells is either defective or not produced at all. Thalassemia can have many different symptoms, from severe anemia (a low blood cell count) to having more red blood cells or fewer white blood cells than normal. There are many types of hematologists, some of which have specializations in certain blood disorders.

The Cisco Application Performance Management Service (Caps) is the Cisco UCS management service that provides a high availability and scalable platform to support the Cisco UCS fabric for the Cisco UCS system. Simplicity Simplicity is the main goal of any application that focuses on the customer, because it is the starting point for every interaction. End users are given applications that are easy to use, to allow them to focus on their work and avoid distractions. On the other hand, developers aim to design applications that are user-friendly and well organized, as well as minimize complexity, in order to increase speed and reduce the chance of error. Hardware and Software Caps offers a scalable application and database service platform for the Cisco UCS. The Cisco UCS system is an integrated infrastructure that allows the implementation of servers, storage, and networking all in one solution, which offers a high availability and scalability. The Service Management that

Caps provides is the key to implementing and managing this system, so that administrators can focus on other tasks.

Cisco UCS Infrastructure The Cisco UCS system includes an integrated infrastructure that provides the core services for managing and managing the servers, storage, and networking. The servers are located in Cisco UCS chassis, while the network components are contained in fabric switches. The service management component is the heart of the Cisco UCS system, and allows administrators to manage and monitor all the components that make up the infrastructure. The high availability and scalability of the Cisco UCS fabric and its inherent redundancy are what provide the Cisco UCS system with its trust level. Architecture Simplicity is the key to the Caps service architecture, because it uses a service-oriented architecture to provide business and technical services to users and administrators. The Caps service is implemented in three tiers: • The Caps service infrastructure, which implements the infrastructure for data persistence and business logic. • The business service tier, which supports the deployment of server apps that provide business functionality. • The Caps Management, which manages and monitors the Cisco UCS system through the Caps Infrastructure and Business services, as well as provides a platform to allow you to administer the Cisco UCS fabric. Caps Infrastructure The

Caps Infrastructure is the core part of the Caps service that provides a high availability, performance, scalability, and redundancy for the service, in order to maximize the Cisco UCS benefits. It consists of the following components:

- The Caps Management
- The Caps Infrastructure
- The Caps Database
- The Caps Cluster
- The Caps Cluster Manager

The Caps Management provides the user interface that allows you to manage and monitor the Cisco UCS infrastructure, manage services and users, and manage the Cisco UCS system.
