Be the first to share your experience with this software.Distribution of proglumide-sensitive tachykinin receptors in dorsal root ganglia and spinal cord of the rat. Proglumide-sensitive tachykinin receptors were localized in spinal cord and dorsal root ganglia of the rat by using the receptor autoradiographic technique with [125I]BH-Tyr-gamma-glumide as a radioligand. Binding sites were detected in many of the peripheral neurons (i.e., myenteric nerve, ENS, and dorsal root ganglion cells) as well as in the somatic and sensory dorsal horn of the spinal cord. Specific binding was found in the superficial layers of the dorsal horn, in the dorsal, lateral, and ventral funiculus, and also in the ventral gray matter. Binding was abolished by preincubation with 100 microM proglumide but not by 100 microM atropine. The rank order of potency was BH-Tyr-gamma-glumide greater than [Sar9,Met(O2)11]substance P greater than [Nle10]substance P greater than substance P. Substance P and the tachykinins substance K and NKA are thus much more potent than BH-Tyr-gamma-glumide in rat dorsal root ganglia and spinal cord. Preincubation of tissue sections with a polyclonal antiserum directed against the carboxyl-terminal sequence of tachykinin NK-1 resulted in a strong reduction of binding, but not when the same tissue sections were preincubated with the anti-thrombin III serum. BH-Tyr-Gln-Glu-Gly-Asn-Tyr-NH2, a selective tachykinin NK-2 agonist, had no affinity for the tachykinin NK-1 receptor in the same region of the rat.Rafael Abati Rafael Abati (;
