looked at them all standing together and didn't know any better, you would say it is one building. Yeah, that's pretty much what they look like. Their size is gargantuan and even with light pollution you still freakin' see these things. For the last couple of years I have grown more interested in the history of our planet, and the construction of the Great Pyramids of Giza. What's new:

. Human code/project leader. Developed by in-house engineering team. Assigned to the Green Division. An ambitious project outside of scope for the team. The spreadsheet has one billion rows. Developer must identify 775,000 errors in this spreadsheet. A senior engineer named Eric takes over as the lead. He's a loner and has taken it upon himself to find the unidentified errors for the entire team. He reaches a point in his career when he feels he can no longer receive praise from his higher ups. Eric decides that the only way he can receive the praise he so desires is to find the error in the spreadsheet first and then he will inform the customer.

Developing The Spreadsheet A senior developer, Richard, starts with the data entry step, which is unfamiliar territory for him. After reviewing the rules of how to input data he comes up with a list of procedures that will ensure he finds the errors. Three other developers begin working with him to either test them out or modify his methods of record keeping. A calendar is used to record the days the project is worked on as well as the date when it is finished. Procedures are created as he feels it will generate the best results. One procedure notices something odd. One user types in Enter as the year, which is an obvious mistake. Before Eric can inform the customer of this error, the three developers behind him have fixed the data collection step. Eric's only way to receive the praise he so desires? Performance testing is used to test the procedures are accurate. Given that 6 hours will be used for testing this project, there can be no dead ends. Eric reads the procedures and finishes in 12 hours. Runs of the data verification procedure take another 18 hours. During this procedure, the developer realizes that all of the data collected is stored in a single file. Instead of having the spreadsheet change into multiple files for each day, it is changed to a single file, which will make it easier to refer to later on. Finally, the new file format takes 7 hours to install. Eric writes a python script to solve the problem and it takes just 4 hours to finish. Communication

Methods Dependencies

1. The lead has contacted Eric and pitched his project.
2. The lead has not contacted Eric. The lead can email Eric by pressing F11 -> View -> Communications. The lead can also follow Eric on Twitter.
3. The lead can talk to any of the other team members if they are in the same time zone as Eric.
4. The lead
