However, when I do the same thing but the second time but with addLineToPoint I get no line from 80.0, 10.0 to 20.0, 10.0. Instead I get something like this This is really odd because I thought when I start the path it is already closed and then I add new points to it. Does anyone know what could be happening here? I am confused. A: You're correct - you're actually using a new path when you're modifying the path. So the first time it looks like it's doing what you want it to, but then when you add the second line, you're starting over with a new path. Here's a method that uses the existing path as the starting point, but increases it's length so that the end point is the start point: // Make start and end points, and the path the same length CGMutablePathRef pathRef = CGPathCreateMutable(); CGPathMoveToPoint(pathRef, NULL, 20, 10); CGPathAddLineToPoint(pathRef, NULL, 80, 10); CGPathAddLineToPoint(pathRef, NULL, 20, 10); I've also added the NULLs just to demonstrate how the path is closed. Additionally, if you want to rotate the path using a different anchor point, use something like this instead: // Make start and end points, and the path
