What's new in Elden Ring:

The best game I played in recent memory. This game rocks. It's a rare game that combines tactical strategy elements with RPG elements both single player and multiplayer. There are excellent mechanics in place at all times to keep the game interesting and to ensure that everyone has a meaningful impact on the story and the world. It has many elements of an RPG which is nice. However the tactical combat is far from traditional RPG combat. You get points to purchase your gear and set up different things for your character. You get a three tiered tree for all your different class resources with general, upper, and lower tiers. Allocating points between these different class elements is a game in and of itself due to the need for balancing out your character between the different classes. I found to use a weapon, armour and a talisman was the best use of resource allocation. This allows you to have an extremely balanced character that focuses on what you should be doing in combat and is not bogged down by resistances or stuff you may be able to dispell. It has fantastic base enemy creatures and through the game you will encounter a wide range of different creatures with different attack patterns meaning it is difficult to zone out on your character. It's very difficult to die in this game, so you have to be careful in your choices to ensure that you don't die. Every encounter is satisfying and the bosses are amazingly crafted. It has a ranged and melee system, and a spell casting element. The spell casting element is interesting and the combat system works well with it to ensure that the different spells can be used to their full effect and to use all elements of your character. It's a fantastic game.

Effects of chemotherapy on a presumed antenatal injury of the syringeal duct in the grasscutter Augochlora Temminck & Schlegel. Syringeal ducts in grasscutter augochlora Temminck & Schlegel were histologically examined in 24 specimens representing the five age groups of the animal. The syringeal ducts were lined with ciliated pseudostratified columnar epithelium in specimens from newborn to seven days old. At ten days old, inflammation and necrosis were observed in the epithelium, but a firm edematous layer maintained the periosteum-and-cartilage capsule integrity of the ductal system. At 21 days old, the epithelium was weakly edematous and possessed large cysts. In all age groups, the ductal wall was
