An elevated risk for the development of pressure ulcers (PUs) has been identified for many patients. We investigated the hypothesis that patients with PUs have lower health care-related quality of life (HRQOL) than patients without PUs. We included 24 patients with PUs and 19 patients without PUs in this study. The patients underwent in-depth interviews concerning the pressure sore. HRQOL was measured by using Short Form-36 and EuroQol-5D questionnaires. For statistical analysis, we performed analysis of covariance and used the Bonferroni correction for multiple testing. The response rates to the questionnaires were 96% (n = 36/37) for the Short Form-36 and 81% (n = 26 e79caf774b
