Granulosa cells are the major cells of the follicle that regulate the release of oocyte maturation inducing hormone (GnRH) and follicle stimulating hormone (FSH). The effects of GH on granulosa cell metabolism have been studied, but the direct effects of GH on cell proliferation have never been evaluated. The aim of the present study was to evaluate the effects of a single injection of GH on follicular cell proliferation as assessed in vivo by BrdU incorporation into the granulosa cell nuclei and in vitro by counting of S-phase cells after a brief exposure of isolated cells to BrdU. In vivo, the relative percentage of granulosa cells incorporated by BrdU was measured by flow cytometry in the ovaries of cyclic or pseudopregnant female rats. A single i.p. injection of GH (1 IU/kg body weight) into adult female rats increased the mitotic activity of granulosa cells by threefold at estrus and 20-30-fold at proestrus, respectively, compared with saline-injected control rats. GH also induced a significant increase in the percentage of BrdU-positive granulosa cells when the
