MM-based incremental decision-making {#Sec9} The proposed decision-making process with MM-based incremental decision-making can be summarized as follows. For each combination of dose and treatment group, the risk of all six dose levels is calculated from the data. If there are differences of more than 5% in risk at any two dose levels, and the difference in dose is relatively small (say, less than one order of magnitude), we conclude that one dose is more efficacious than the other. The risk of efficacy at all dose levels is calculated from the data, and the global risk is estimated from that. The number of patients treated is also computed. If the dose level with the highest estimated expected benefit represents a one order-of-magnitude improvement relative to the current standard
