Download Link: use of a standardised suture to mark a line in a cervical scalpel or knife cut at the cephalic vein: patient information for the anaesthetist. A new marking technique to indicate a line for cutting the main trunks of the cephalic veins in an external laryngeal block, or in an external jugular vein and temporal vein block, is described. The technique of marking the line is illustrated by a dissection case. The new line marking is a standardised, reproducible and safe technique which patients can expect to apply during surgery. It will provide guidance to the anaesthetist in the position of the cut during a sub-mental block and should reduce accidental injury to the patient and subsequent complications.INTRODUCTION {#s1} ======== Anaesthesia for multiple cerebral vascular malformations (MVMs) is a difficult neurosurgical procedure. The MVMs that most commonly cause presentation in childhood are those associated with haemangioblastoma. These are almost exclusively su
