“Are you looking to grab a bite after work?” “Is there somewhere new you want to go?” “Do you feel like a cup of coffee?” “It’s such a gorgeous day - would you like to take a stroll?” The question lingers in the mind. The carefully worded invitation teases you with the shimmering hope that soon you’ll know exactly what you want to do. And then. You’ll know. Many years have passed since you planted your first garden in sleepy Garland, and now the city is starting to feel as crowded as it did then. Your friends have drifted away, and you have far too much on your hands to be asking everyone out on dates at the moment. So you set out in search of something new and interesting. For a chance to forge a new kind of life away from the city; a place where you feel at home, and where you can finally be yourself. Hello Garland! Do you have what it takes to make a city your home? Move in. Explore the city. Build your own. Fulfill your own goals. He can't take everything for granted, so he sent Keisuke to kill the female character Iori and prevent any interference. Unfortunately, Keisuke went to his end and made a new game. Keisuke made a game that exceeded my expectations. The developer's actions are not in sync with the quality of the game. It is like the developer is playing the game for the first time, making changes so that people say it is the best game. Moreover, it does not seem to be an honest game. Too many people will think that a game with 500 ratings is popular. Is it worth looking forward to the update? I don't think so. This is the worst customer support, saying such a thing. If the game itself is not good, we should not look to the customer support. I do not want to get involved in the company with this game. I'm returning it. When I was on the way, I encountered the woman. However, I could only walk around, so I sat down and thought it over. I returned to the facility. I took a little action, and I went to the bottom of the mountain and went into a deep forest. I turned on my radio, and started playing it. There was a deep, deep, deep forest. He said he did not need to lose consciousness. Yes, yes, it does not seem to be a miracle. That's why I returned to the factory. Let's go to this month's digital data room. I installed the game and let it run, and it was good. It was so good I did not have to play in the game. If the car continues to run, we will have to get used to it. This game has quality and money. I want to play it. I met my own beautiful woman. It is not necessary to spend a lot. I also got access to a special spot where I can use a lot of money. So I played the game. The first game was good, and then the game was really good, the cost was increasing, but that did not stop me. Although it is difficult to talk about the whole game, I think I can say that the game has very good power. This is a game that I want to play in the future. I play for the sake of fun

and Simmie finally log onto the internet at about 6:30pm. Boris, the newbie, and BudwhaSpiff follow two seconds later. The newbies haven't loaded their Morlay account, so are not able to participate in Morlay Activities during their first hours online. As they fool around, their options are to email kiwisource, filecards, play entertainment games or have a chat. Their friend list is fairly lean, they only know of a few newbies (this is considered a very low number, but we're in junior years now) and it doesn't take long to notice that many of their friends are also logged on to the forum. While they aren't too worried about being noticed by their classmates, they did feel slightly anxious at first. Simmie is worried that he'll get 'perks' that he should not have. Boris is worried because it's now time for the 'early' conversation with Viv! Husky shares that he wants to check his Facebook to see what's happening. As he loads the page he also loads the Searge board (a forum about Sienseo which he has joined) as he is curious to know about Sienseo. Simmie informs the group that they can send them messages through Morlay, and after another load of information they establish what happened with Viv. BudwhaSpiff sends out a subject line which describes the circumstances. The topic is written as follows: Haraka, a drama teacher and Rohan's third year teacher, is expelled at the end of third term for a bomb threat. She is walking in the school after the final bell has rung, and when asked to go home, she replies "I am going!" at which point she is grabbed from behind by what appears to be a student. Two other students stand by whilst she is grabbed, and are seen taking things in the vicinity. The three suspects are interviewed and deny having any involvement. An SOS has gone out for Rohan and Kies and is matched with an intensive search conducted by a group of people looking for Rohan. It is seen that Rohan has a tracking device on his wheelchair. When no-one turns up to pick him up, the search team arrives at the evacuated school, and a police tracker unit is deployed. Rohan is found and taken home by the search team. At the hospital, his injuries are found to be due to water being pushed into his throat by a burst collar stud.
