Tylosin suppresses interleukin-2 expression in spleen cells of mouse. Tylosin, an anitibiotic drug produced by Streptomyces, has been reported to have many immunosuppressive effects. The suppressive effects on the immune system are still under investigation. In the present study, the influence of tylosin on interleukin-2 (IL-2) expression and interferon-gamma (IFN-gamma) production in mouse spleen cells was examined. Spleen cells treated with tylosin (3.0 micrograms/ml) for 24 h produced less IFN-gamma than control cells. However, treatment with tylosin did not reduce the IL-2 production. Serum IL-2 levels of mice treated with tylosin increased to a greater extent than control mice. Cell depletion analysis in vivo demonstrated that the IFN-gamma-mediated suppression was in the macrophage. Tylosin may suppress the macrophage function by increasing serum IL-2. This mechanism may be related to the effects of tylosin on T-cell-dependent immune responses.Tissue oxidation in the pathogenesis of periodontal disease. The biologic basis for the development of periodontal disease remains unclear. Based on the assumption that the forces required to cause attachment loss are generated within the periodontal ligament (PDL) of the tooth, the author examines the two factors of the PDL that represent key biologic events in the development of periodontal disease--the epithelial attachment to the tooth surface and the mechanical stability of the tooth-PDL junction. Thrombosis or occlusion of the microcirculation in the PDL appears to be the primary pathology in periodontitis. Therefore, the studies reported in this review focus on the role of blood-PDL barrier disruption in the development and progression of periodontal disease. Biochemical and clinical evidence supporting the role of blood in the initiation of the progressive inflammatory and destructive phenomena associated with periodontal disease is presented. The author also discusses methods that have been used to establish the presence of blood in PDLs and how these experiments support the postulated etiology of blood-PDL barrier disruption in periodontal disease.Friday, December 18, 2015 Dystopia From the editor: Who said that writing is always easy? Use of an integrated, cytology-directed, hematology sample collection strategy for lung cancer screening: an area-wide survey. OBJECTIVE. Laryngeal cryotherapy, a modality to screen for early lung cancer, has had disappointing performance in long-term follow-up studies. Considering that screening asymptomatic individuals is not recommended for lung cancer, we explored the utility of an integrated, cytology-directed, hematology sample collection (IDHC) strategy for lung cancer screening. METHODS. All participants were residents of 2 towns in the state of New Hampshire. The IDHC strategy includes collection of a sputum sample for high-risk individuals, including smokers, and a cytology-directed, hematology sample (CDHS) from the distal areas of the two upper lobes with an endpoint of pharyngeal/tracheal margins. RESULTS. The IDHC strategy enrolled 1,560 residents: 1,402 smokers, 339 current/former smokers, and 11 never smokers. A total of 1,044 (68.5%) participants completed CDHS. Of these CDHSs, 80.8% were adequate (containing ≥ 25,000 leukocytes/ μ L). The overall sensitivity of the IDHC strategy for lung cancer was 29.1% in smokers and 4.6% in former/current smokers. The overall specificity was 98.8% for both groups. The positive predictive value was 2.6% in smokers and 41.4% in former/current smokers. CONCLUSIONS. A significant percentage of smokers and former/current smokers exhibited an adequate CDHS, but the sensitivity of the IDHC strategy is low. The utility of the strategy is encouraging, considering that > 90% of the CDHSs were collected through a sterile syringe with a 23-gauge needle. The IDHC strategy is safe, inexpensive, and easily replicable. in Sec. 8.5 to be 15%. The margin could, of course, be larger for asymmetric chains, but we expect that, for the relatively short chains studied here, they will depend weakly on chain length. As shown in Fig. \(\text{chain_sketch}\), the four chains were tested over the range of strains 0% to 3%. The results were mapped to “1” or “0” at those locations where the substrate was unambiguously in contact with a site containing sampsonite
