A .Q: jquery - how to make ajax function be more efficient - re-fetching data? If I have an ajax function defined like this: `$(document).on('click','faq',function(){ var $this = $(this), questionNumber = $this.data('question-number'); $.getJSON('/questions/'+questionNumber).done(function(data){ $this.hide(); if(data.type === 'success'){ $('#faq_'+questionNumber).empty(); $('#faq_'+questionNumber).append(data.html); } }); });` This works and `$.getJSON()` fetches the data just fine - but there are sometimes 300+ questions on the page, so it would be REALLY beneficial if the page only refreshed when necessary. I have tried to add a "refresh" button next to the faq list, but it doesn't work like that. So how to make the page only update when there is new data and not re-fetch the data everytime something changes? I also really appreciate if anyone could give any advice on what is a more efficient way to achieve this, instead of `$.getJSON()` fetching a lot of data and the same functions all the time. Many thanks! A: No. I have a lot of enemies in the jquery community. Define a refresh button (or any other semantic element) and bind an action to it. `$("#refresh").click(function() { $(".someOtherElement").load("someplace/somefile.html"); });` But, then you have to re-wire your events, your logic, and all that jazz when you make modifications, and there isn't much you can do about it. If you find yourself having to do this all the time and have no other option, then you probably shouldn't be using AJ
