Containers of various shapes and sizes are used for containing other goods, and may, in some cases, be arranged in multi-unit groups. For example, beverage cans may be grouped into one or more cases of, for example, 12 cans, that can then be shipped in a single container. Examples of such containers include cases of cans packaged in boxes, in which one or more boxes containing 12 or 12.4 cans each are then packaged in a single case. For clarity, 12 cans will be referred to herein as cans to be sold in groups of 12 cans, and 24 cans will be referred to herein as cans to be sold in groups of 24 cans. There may be interest in arranging a plurality of cases of 12 cans into a single multi-unit group, where the cases may not be permanently coupled together. For example, a particular retailer may order beverage cans from a can manufacturer, and the retailer may desire to arrange them into a single multi-unit group as soon as those cans arrive at the retailer's premises. The retailer may thus arrange cans from a can manufacturer's supply into multi-unit groups of 12 cans, and ship those multi-unit groups, for example, in a single container to the retailer's location. The retailer may then separate the cans from the multi-unit groups at the retailer's location, and place the cans in the retailer's inventory

? Description History Super Heavy Tank This was created using the X-tool in Ludum Dare XLVIII with only a week to develop and submit. The result would be printed and put up against the other participants in the Ludum Dare event. The Tiger Tank 59 was created to engage in a battle as one of 14 fighters in a field. It was designed to be able to mass produce it in the near future. The tank was designed and concepted to fill a hole in the market for tanks that were cheap and easy to create on a personal scale; a market that has been best filled by the Battlepod game mod. The Robot Tank (or an unnamed bot-tank by many people) was based on several robots I have created. The overall concept of the tank came from several Tank Command games created by players, including Jamie, Joshua, Jesse and Colt. The overall design combined elements from the cross-over game that was being developed at the time as well as the robot-tank design released on map 10 of Tanks Uther. Features The Tiger Tank 59 is designed to be a medium tank (20 ton) that can operate for a long period of time. It is a hybrid robot/computer/tactical game design, where the tank is used for both combat and transport. The tank features 3 main gun rotors that are based on my 2mm airbrush. They function a little differently in real life. The tank is designed for the creator and environment. The front of the tank is made to blast a crate, crate and wipe out with little damage to the front. The front of the tank is left open and can be easily attached to a dolly, railcar, or any truck for transportation. The remote controlled turret

is based off the dual motion-control tank commander and control set by Jesse that was used in both Guns Uther and the Warlord Tank game mod. The controls allow the tank to be used as a command-based game with a strategic map. The controls are derived from the Tank Command games. The goal of the game is to either destroy the enemy base or make it drop ammo. The machine guns have the capacity to blast up to 20 rounds per minute. The machine guns can be attached to the front turrets as well as the main arm of the tank. The turret allows the tank to make laser blasts, fire smoke, and any other odd or interesting effects. The variants of the machine
