I want to design a Xamarin.iOS app that has a similar look and feel to Facebook. Specifically, I'd like to design the top toolbar (with the search button, etc.) to mimic the look of Facebook and the bottom toolbar (with the items such as Share or Send) to mimic the look of email or SMS apps. I understand how to do all this when designing the main view controller and inside a XIB. But I'm not sure how to do it if I create it programmatically. Do I use a different ViewController class? Do I use a XIB? I can't seem to find any tutorials that explain how to do this. A: You can add a toolbar to a UIViewController using a NSToolbar on the bottom. There are 3 buttons that you can add, the Search, Share & Settings buttons, the button names being the same as those in a NSToolbar. This will have to be used when the view is first displayed, i.e. before your code has a chance to setup your top toolbar. The real trick is using the normal UIToolbar (i.e. buttons) on the top, that will appear even though your view is not displaying. A: Well, you can replace whole visual of UIViewController with CustomViewController. I have some idea for you. Lets say you want to change UIViewControllers whole design and also change view structure. Lets say that you have a screen of login and its similar to login screen of facebook. Your app will have also "logging" screen. Lets say you create a custom view controller for login screen
