When you have setup your Graphics card, you can install the software on the Laptop and you will be able to use the laptop with both. Pretty awesome :). The dGPU is much Faster then the built-in graphics card. So if you have a laptop that was not designed to have an eGPU and you got it for a low price, buy it now, and install the HP eGPU with 1x adapter to have a perfect performance laptop with tons of storage, high-speed Thunderbolt 3 USB-C, and better performance than any desktop build. We had a few issues with the MacBook Air, we could not disable the built-in WiFi as we were instructed.

(That's a big sign that there was a problem with our eGPU setup) We had to move the dGPU to the Thunderbolt 2 port and it's working perfectly now. The Thunderbolt 3 port was perfect since the MacBook was the only device able to leverage Thunderbolt 3. Razer's dGPU Tachyon Pro ($359) is a lightning-fast external graphics-card solution (eGPU) based on the all-new 14nm FinFET technology. Razer says it has up to 3x the performance of the prior-generation dGPU. What do you get for the lofty price tag? That's a lot of money but we can tell you right now that you get much more than hardware. That's what we mean by "lightning fast". When we tested it against our Core i9-9900K-equipped desktop PC we found the dGPU pulled off some serious gaming performance and was able to play our games at 4K with more than acceptable settings. There are other 14nm GPUs out there, however, such as the Asus Ares II and AsRock's dGPU Orion Pro. These have less features than the Tachyon Pro, but the sheer performance of the 14nm solution definitely makes the Tachyon Pro worth looking into.
