As far as I know, the only wireless speaker that pairs subwoofer and midrange driver is the Sonos One; other systems, such as Google Chromecast and Apple AirPlay, only deliver audio to a single room system. The Sonos speaker is one of the best uses of technology Ive seen. (It should not be named for the One!) Ive used it as a primary system with no regrets, and Im able to adjust volume on the Sone via Bluetooth or the Sonos app. As I watch TV, I can turn up the volume on the TV as it gets too quiet, or lower it as the volume on the TV gets too loud. I can skip through TV channels as I watch movies, and I can dim the lights to suit my mood. It has two way streaming to multiple devices and it adds sound from any other compatible Sonos system (with a USB adapter) in the house. It has two speakers and a subwoofer, and it fits in a bookshelf easily. The speaker remote is very straightforward and you can control volume, as well as pause and play on a TV and a cable box. I did the Installing the Sonos One review with three Sonos speakers, and the One looked after itself; it was easy to setup and it added about 15 minutes to the setup time of the other speakers. The Sonos One is the way to go for wireless speakers; theyre fun, and theyre more intelligent than most other wireless speakers. HR, 514 The System 10 is the ultimate in contemporary mass-market audio. With impressive credentials and a large standard finish, it is an industry powerhouse and one of Hi-Ends finest and most competitively priced home theater/theater-in-a-box. Equally attractive is its very price, at just $599. The 10 is comprised of five major components: three front-firing speakers and two tweeters, a room correction and equalization DSP chip, a powerful amplifier, and cables with CTA Synergic Injector technology, all held in a handsome ABS enclosure. Performance is excellent, with clear, rounded, cohesive, and spacious audio, and equally excellent extension from the front-firing speakers to the rear. This was particularly true of orchestral and film soundtracks. Optional tweeters and front-firing speakers upgrade the sound from the 4.5 star to the 4.5-plus rating. In tandem with a 300-watt amplifier, these 'over the door' speakers offer jaw dropping performance for the money. The System 10 offers exceptionally good sound for as little as $599.
