KEYMACRO is a utility which allows you to type MAC addresses using an assortment of keys. It's a program which has a user-friendly interface, with different windows for the different types of addresses. It works with 128-bit string format (EUI-64/Extended Unique Identifier 64) addresses, however, it supports all kinds of MAC address formats, including standard, net/broadcast, mac/global, vendor-specific, etc. MAC address input can be performed with or without auto-completion, and a code is added to the clipboard after the right address has been typed. A handy feature of this program is the list of characters which can be typed. If your Mac has a keyboard with a single backspace key, then you will find the "delete character" in the list, as well as a "clean" button, and a "Enter" key. These keys are used for, respectively, the delete, backspace, and the enter (which is usually used as a terminating character). Finally, you can have multiple windows with the same MAC address. After you have entered a whole address, you can edit it, or start a new address in a new window.
