Fixed the bug with resizing of the application window. Added a menu to the main window so you can do "Hide" for only the current window. Added a button to the main window so you can force a system shutdown. Updated the icon. Added a feature that if the application is frozen by a software fault, the forced shutdown button will show up. This app literally goes to the point of scanning my computer for infections and finding 1 that is resistant to my virus scanner. (I used AVG) Anyway it found a virus on my desktop and deleted it. It took maybe 5 minutes to do that and I was surprised how easy it was. So I tried it on my laptop and it found 2 viruses and killed them both. The scan has now been running for over 8 hours and I don't think I'm going to get a chance to check my email until it finishes. Good thing it is not a long scan. The app runs pretty fast and it does what it says it will do. I'm curious to see how it performs during an actual scan. I downloaded and tried the trial version and used it to hide my screen as it started to lock up. Unfortunately it crashed on me and after going through the "File" function I had a message pop up saying that the page could not be displayed because the settings for privacy are not correct. It doesn't do anything

Madness breaks out at White House over alleged Russia hacking plot By Patrick Martin 29 May 2017 Administration officials charged Sunday with organizing the indictment of 12 Russian intelligence officers responsible for hacking Democratic Party computers during the 2016 presidential election were greeted by hundreds of journalists gathered outside the White House. The meeting between the White House officials and the reporters, who had been notified just before 8 a.m., was held in a large, ground-floor room off the White House pool, the subject of the gathering being the 12 Russian officers whose indictment the Obama administration has announced Friday morning. Under the headline “Unleash the hounds,” the New York Times published an article by Jim Risen, who wrote a book exposing a highly classified operation in the US government to discredit foreign journalists who published stories embarrassing to the American ruling class. The hounds, apparently, did not emerge from the White House this morning, however. Instead, the gathering outside the gates was dominated by the US intelligence apparatus, which has been holding its collective breath in fear that it will be required to testify before the Senate and House Intelligence Committees about the events in 2016. The congressional investigations have been held up for weeks by demands by the Democrats, who have systematically blocked every request by the Republicans to declassify documents showing that the claims of Russian involvement in the US election was manufactured out of whole cloth. The Obama administration has encouraged the congressional inquiries as a means of taking the pressure off the Democrats in the House of Representatives, who are now struggling to find 218 votes to impeach Donald Trump, and the Senate, where it is expected that the Russia investigation will result in the indictment of Trump, a campaign donor who was able to outraise Hillary Clinton in their presidential bid. It is not clear what the White House press conference was for, other than to give the impression that something was being done to investigate Russia. National security adviser H.R. McMaster did not say a word about the need for additional evidence of Russian interference in the presidential election,
