One of the few reviews I've read of the film said it was funny. And that I found it boring. I've never been a fan of vampire stories, and I was kind of dreading this one. I didn't want to see the clichés or myopic vision of the genre played out for me. So I took this to be pretty much a bore-fest. I was wrong. It's witty, it's clever, it's more than a little mean. The film, written and directed by the young comedy duo of Jason Friedberg and Aaron Seltzer, satirizes many of the stereotypes associated with vampires. Vampires are pretty cool. I mean, not when they're staking people and their heads are exploding. Not cool at all. It's generally considered offensive that vampires are always portrayed as charming. It's not a real vampire that you're dealing with, after all. The film takes the vampire stereotype to its most extreme. Becca, a high-school student who's been living a boring life since her parents died, is afflicted with fangs and super powers that, at least in theory, she doesn't understand. Becca (Jenn Proske) is plagued by her obsessive over-active imagination, constantly imagining that she's a vampire. The setup is that her crush on the school nerd (Matt Lanter) goes nowhere and she, Vampires suck you in, and you never get out. Vampires suck! I have this insatiable urge to suck my own blood out and continue drinking. . . . Starring: Jenn Proske, Matt Lanter, Christopher Riggi, Christopher N. Riggi. . . . The premise of the new film is so simple that it invites a certain kind of slapstick absurdity that works well. I have a taste for blood. When I accidentally killed a stray cat with my teeth, I got this black spot on my tongue, and it. I was a teenage vampire. I was kind of pleased not to see her grating presence dragging the film down any further. . . . They're not vampires at all, they're space aliens. But let's not forget that it is just the same genre of vampire movie. People out there are just gorging on the same old stuff. Vampires never grow up. Vampires Suck. You know that one vampire in every movie that's always. Vampires suck!
