The report details the new Census Bureau statistics showing that Philadelphia dropped to No. 7 in poverty among the more than 30 million U.S. households. The national poverty level was 15.2 percent, which was higher than it was in 2002 at 14.3 percent, but still below the 19.6 percent in 2007. Critics say that the decline is due to the city's relatively stagnant economy. There was some good news for Philadelphia's poorest residents in 2009, though, as citywide homicides dropped 35 percent. Ten people died in the city's 9th Police District, where Philadelphia City Council President Nutter has his headquarters. But so far in 2010, homicides are down even more, by about 40 percent, compared to 2009. The Police Department says that, with respect to violent crime, 2010 has thus far mirrored 2009. Meanwhile, the city continued to tackle the issue of repeat offenders by charging the most serious offenders with new felony charges for repeat offenses. Last year, however, the new charges were successful only in a handful of cases, according to Police Commissioner Charles Ramsey. Some of the repeat offenders did receive life sentences, a first in Philadelphia for many years.[The expression of growth hormone and substance P in regenerating spinal cord of rats]. A single lesion of the spinal cord of rats at the neck level caused a decrease of the growth hormone (GH) concentration in the blood plasma. An increase of the GH level was found to be the consequence of the regenerating processes in the spinal cord tissues. The stimulating effect of the spinal cord on the GH synthesis was demonstrated in in vitro experiments. The origin of GH was found in the neurons of the spinal cord and in glial cells of neuropil. It was demonstrated that
