This invention relates to a fabric for artificial grass which is composed of a fiber of pulp, a synthetic resin and a lubricating material for establishing a good sliding property between the upper and lower surfaces of the fabric and between the leg parts which constitute the pattern constituting the surface of the fabric, hence providing a simulated grass surface, as well as to an artificial grass manufactured from the fabric. For artificial grass, generally, a fibrous material is employed as a material from which grass blades are sculptured. In this connection, coarse fiber fabrics such as hemp, jute, wire, mohair, nylon, synthetic resin fiber, and similar fibrous materials are employed as the material for the fibrous material constituting the grass blade. However, in order to simulate grass blades fabricated of fiber materials of this type, for example, jute grass blades, particularly when using these fiber materials as the fibrous material, there are the problems that the artistic appearance is not good due to the fiber having a straight, solid blade, and that the friction coefficient is excessively high between the blade and the ground. In order to solve the above-described problems, artificial grasses utilizing fiber material of a cloth structure have already been proposed. In connection with such artificial grasses, for example, it has already been proposed to use as the material for the fabric constituting the surface, an artificial grass using pulp fibers and synthetic resin fibers, as disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,095,502. There has also been proposed an artificial grass using a polymer fiber of a synthetic resin such as polyethylene, as disclosed in Japanese Unexamined Utility Model Publication No. 60-56685. However, a grass fabricated by employing the material disclosed
