How can you love Draw? Your answer to this question depends on the type of artist or designer you are and how you use Photoshop. If you use Sketch to build out basic color ideas for your images, then you'll be delighted with the box tool presets and how easily they can be applied to existing pixels. Working with preset shapes makes for another quick-start tool, especially with the Shape Selection tool. If you're focused on effectively creating focal points or areas of focus in your picture, the Eraser tool is one of the fastest means of achieving that. If you're a "newbie," and you find Sketch doesn't provide the amount of control you want, you'll be pleased with its Layer Masks. You can use them to easily affect certain layers so they lighten or darken, while the others remain perfectly "correct." In other words, Photoshop just isn't perfect, even when it's turned on its most creative, and most powerful, end—regardless of the fact that so many of us have it pretty much working for us. The main and most useful change since Lightroom 6 is the new double-page function. Much like the desktop version's Book feature, now you can flip to a new page by pressing on the page key to the left of the scroll bar, rather than right to left. And if that's not enough for you, you can also disable the sidebar at any time by hitting that key. In fact, the highlight feature essentially replaces the dual canvas view for multi-page editing. I missed the multi-canvas view so much in Lightroom 5, but the highlight feature was most useful.

Start by choosing the Eyedropper tool to make some color selections. 1 The Eyedropper tool is used to select a color for the red-eye adjustment. After making your selections, the next step is to use the Clone Stamp tool to remove the unwanted color from the image. Doing so will copy the color from the selection and remove it from the image. You will want to apply the same adjustment to all images that have the red-eye. I recommend using a preset adjustment option when adjusting for red-eye. You can either choose the Preset Newton 2a (Black and White), 18 Adjustments, Preset Mirror or Preset + Luminance.
