Cook, Donald M. Johnson, Neil Weiss. Graduate Texts in Mathematics. Protective and therapeutic effect of bosentan in murine insulin-induced diabetes mellitus. Aerobic exercise protects against the development of type 2 diabetes mellitus. Bosentan, an endothelin-1 receptor antagonist, increases nitric oxide release and thereby may exert a protective effect. To test the hypothesis that bosentan protects mice from the development of streptozotocin-induced diabetes mellitus by an increase in nitric oxide (NO) production, mice received a single, intravenous dose of bosentan, together with insulin, or insulin alone. In another series of experiments, the therapeutic efficacy of bosentan in insulin-induced diabetes mellitus was studied. Mice were given bosentan, insulin, or no treatment for 7 d, starting on the day of induction of diabetes. Plasma glucose levels were determined before and after the respective treatments. Insulin-induced diabetes mellitus resulted in a decrease in insulin-stimulated glucose clearance. Bosentan treatment caused a significant improvement
